

Being a Successful Pop Star

What I enjoy most about being a pop star is that I can go on lots of tours such as the United States, England, France, Portugal and many other beautiful countries making my fans happy by taking pictures or selfies with them or giving them my autograph. I also love singing for my fans when I am performing in a concert because I love it when they sing along and wave their candles or flashlights up high.

The biggest shock about being a pop star is that when you are in public, people recognize you really quickly so it's difficult to maintain privacy which is really frustrating. The paparazzi come rushing over with big cameras to interview me which is really dangerous for the crowds because someone could get hit by their big, heavy cameras.

What I learnt at school that helped me to succeed is to never give up because you won't know everything from the beginning but, slowly, if you keep working hard you will see improvements. Thanks to my music teachers for helping me become the singer I am today.

Lastly, I want to say that being a pop star is fun. No matter what, always follow your dream and work hard for it.
